LETTER OF RECOGNITION

In the city of Calgary, there are 2200 dedicated social workers who provide professional assistance to people seeking to overcome personal and social problems in order to lead satisfying, full, and productive lives. In March of each year, the Canadian Association of Social Workers (CASW), provincial/territorial organizations and social workers from across the country plan a National Social Work Week in celebration of a proud profession with a long history of commitment to improving the well-being of people in society, particularly the disadvantaged.

This year's theme "Social Workers Speak Up: Poverty Costs" encourages social workers to call upon citizens to recognize the impacts of poverty and to support its eradication.

I am pleased to recognize March 1 to 7, 2010 as National Social Work Week, and acknowledge the important service social workers provide that make a difference in our community.
